2025 MDDC MEDIA GUIDE

MDDC represents news media organizations and their multi-platform businesses in Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia.

News media connects communities

Local news is the best source of accurate, timely information about the communities in which we live. This Media Guide, produced by MDDC Press Association, helps connect you to educated, informed audiences through news articles and advertising opportunities.

Local news is trusted and effective. Journalists serve their local communities and help neighbors understand what is happening in their communities. According to Pew Research Center, people who closely follow local news actively participate in the life of their communities and regular local voters follow news closely.

Local news organizations hold those in power accountable. The “watchdog” function of objective, local reporting keeps residents aware of and engaged in government actions. According to the Brookings Institution, local news organizations keep municipal borrowing costs low and save taxpayers money by staying alert to incidences of fraud and corruption that may otherwise go unreported.

Whether in print or online, people are more likely to trust local news outlets. As you look to connect with your community through news or advertising, local news offers a trusted, effective introduction.

The Public's Right to Know

Transparency allows the public to meaningfully engage with government.

Public Notice

Governments are statutorily required to publish notices of various official actions. Requiring independent, third-party newspapers to ensure that public notices run in accordance with the law helps prevent government officials from hiding information they would prefer the public not to see. These proactively published notices mean that the public does not need to know what to request to stay informed.

Open Meetings

The public has a right to access the internal workings of government at all levels and to provide input into the political process. Open Meetings laws require public bodies to provide the public – and news organizations – notice of meeting dates as well as agendas and minutes of the meetings. Individuals should be able to learn about pending government actions and provide feedback through open meetings.

Public Records

Meaningful access to government records is critical to government transparency and a cornerstone of democracy. The public has a right to understand the government actions taken on behalf of the community. Access is central to evaluating government operations and holding leaders accountable. Public records are the primary sources for government actions and must be accessible to the public.

Internship Program

MDDC Reese Cleghorn Internship Program

The future of journalism is on the line. At its heart, journalism depends on fresh blood – bright young people who want to do more than just blog from their basements.

MDDC 2025 Intern Cohort

MDDC's Reese Cleghorn Internship Program offers young people the opportunity and the training to launch successful careers in the profession. That's better for them and for all of us who rely on solid reporting and editing to make informed decisions as citizens in these challenging times.

Democracy is in crisis. Local news is the best source of accurate, timely information about communities.

Since its inception in 1999, the program has provided paid 8-week, "real world" summer experiences for 145 (and counting!) college students from across Maryland, Delaware and the District.

If you'd like to support the program – and the future of good journalism – you can make a tax-deductible donation at mddcpress.com.

The Frederick News-Post

Since 1883, the locally owned Frederick News-Post has been the paper of record for Frederick County. Frederick is a diverse community of over 93,500 households and has a median household income of $85,715. The Frederick News-Post has a loyal and engaged readership base. Frederick has expanded to be a commuter market to DC and Baltimore. Regional competitors lack the penetration to truly reach this valuable marketplace. Frederick News-Post.com, the county's largest news site, reaches about a half million users a month. We publish a responsive site to ease digital engagement across all platforms. The Frederick News-Post should be a part of any regional buy targeting the DC MSA.
